HISTORY

At 9:10 a.m. on September 11, 2001, the last passengers were picked up from a subway station that was originally opened in 1909. This happened 7 minutes after a second plane hit one of the towers at the World Trade Center in New York. The station was left empty and buried under the rubble of the collapsed towers until a long recovery process resurfaced it. However, the path rail system was a key system that continued operation outside of the Twin Towers, providing an invaluable path to evacuate survivors and transport first responders.

THE MONUMENT

The monument displays a path rail segment from the tracks from the World Trade Center wreckage, in an uplifted position held by granite support pillars, which refer to the solid bedrock of Manhattan that supports its massive buildings. The granite support pillars are in pairs, joined by an internally illuminated acrylic spine that suggests the hope of light emerging out of darkness. The base of the monument will carry the story line of the monument and light will be included to be sure the monument is respectfully lit at night. The artifact location is central to Riverwalk and provides visibility from all vantage points.
